

Customer account ledgers of Edward Backwell, 1663-72

Edward Backwell's ledgers are the oldest systematic set of banking records in the UK. They have been inscribed on UNESCO's UK Memory of the World Register in recognition of their importance to our shared cultural heritage.

background Edward Backwell had a large and diverse business, comprising thousands of separate accounts with a wide range of clients, including merchants and tradesmen; departments of government and the royal household; City livery companies and chartered overseas trading companies; and individuals with substantial income or wealth.

Most of these clients came to him for financial services. Others came to purchase or commission items of jewellery or objects fashioned from gold or silver. For some clients he provided a safe place to deposit, and earn interest on, their money; for others he provided loans; for others foreign exchange; for others the convenience of an account from which to pay their day to day expenses.

Backwell's ledgers record his dealings with each of these clients. The transactions recorded in the ledgers show the sources of each client's money and the nature of their expenditure.

The ledgers are the earliest systematic set of banking records to survive in the United Kingdom, and are all the more important for being the records of one of the financial giants of his age. They predate the foundation of the Bank of England by over thirty years, and demonstrate the early form of modern banking in Britain, showing how payments at home and abroad were made, the terms on which interest was received and paid, how foreign exchange was undertaken, how bankers kept track of their business and how they worked together to provide a coordinated and stable financial system.

The only other extant banking records contemporaneous with these ledgers are those of the Fleet Street goldsmith bankers Robert Blanchard and Francis Child (whose business was later known as Child & Co) and Thomas Fowle, whose activities were more narrowly focused on personal clients and in the 1660s were only beginning to move into banking, and a number of discrete account books and other records of the scrivener bankers Robert Abbott, Robert Clayton and John Morris.

documents NatWest Group holds Backwell's nine surviving customer account ledgers. Each ledger contains between 1,700 and 2,500 separate accounts, and together there are a total of over 5,700 open page spreads, here referred to as 'folios'. These records are the continuation of a series of eight earlier ledgers which have not survived.

The ledgers would have been the most important items (hence their survival) within a wider set of financial records. Cross references to some of these related records which have not survived appear against some of the transactions in the ledgers. For instance, in relation to Backwell's handling of transactions involving goldsmiths work there are often cross references to 'WB', thought to stand for 'Work Book'.

It is not known with certainty who entered the transactions in the ledgers, but from 1666 the ledger entries are written in a new hand, which is believed to be that of Charles Duncombe, who had been apprenticed to Backwell the previous year.

Each folio is identified by a contemporary number, and contains debit entries on the left hand page and credit entries on the right hand page. On each folio there may be one or more individual customer accounts, and some customer accounts run over several folios.

Where an account has an outstanding debit or credit balance at the end of the period covered by the ledger, this is carried forward to a later ledger, and the account contains a reference to the ledger and folio to which the balance is carried forward. A corresponding reference appears in the later ledger, giving the folio and ledger from which the balance has been brought forward. These cross references indicate that each ledger was identified by a letter of the alphabet, as follows:

- Ledger I/J (ref EB/1/1): March 1663 – December 1663
- Ledger L (ref EB/1/2): March 1664 – September 1664
- Ledger M (ref EB/1/3): September 1664 – March 1665
- Ledger O (ref EB/1/4): January 1666 – December 1666
- Ledger P (ref EB/1/5): January 1667 – March 1668
- Ledger Q (ref EB/1/6): March 1668 – March 1669
- Ledger R (ref EB/1/7): March 1669 – March 1670
- Ledger S (ref EB/1/8): March 1670 – March 1671
- Ledger T (ref EB/1/9): March 1671 – March 1672

Eight ledgers referred to as A-H must have once existed, and there are entries brought forward from ledger H into the surviving volumes. The series also originally extended beyond ledger T as some of the account balances within the later surviving ledgers are carried forward to ledgers U/V and W. There are also two ledgers (K and N) which have not survived in the extant series, the latter coinciding with the Great Plague of 1665.

In order to minimise handling of this unique collection, access is permitted by appointment to microfilm copies of the ledgers only.

Introductory note

- This index comprises an alphabetical list of account holders, but does not contain an index to names referred to in transactions within the accounts.
- Where an account title includes multiple variant spellings of forenames, these appear on separate lines within the Forename(s) column.
- Where an account title includes multiple variant spellings of surnames, the alternative surnames appear in the Alternative name(s) column. The variant surnames also appear in alphabetical order within the index.

Index conventions

General

The index has been compiled from the original ledger pages according to the rules below.

Many accounts of individual customers appear in multiple ledgers and sometimes also on more than one folio within a single ledger (a 'folio' in this case being an open spread showing debit and credit entries on facing pages). The time period covered by an account can vary from a single year to the whole date span covered by the ledgers (1663-1672).

The rules below relate to all types of customer account, but are presented here in relation to personal accounts, referring to forenames and surnames. Accounts of institutions and other non-personal accounts are indexed according to the same rules, with the primary index term in the Surname column, qualifying information in the Forename(s) column and variant spellings in the Alternative name(s) column.

The ledgers also include some accounts relating to Edward Backwell's personal activities. These are not generally identified as such in the original ledgers, and they generally appear without annotation in the index, for example 'Timber at Creslow'.

Spelling

The spelling of account holders' names within the ledgers is not at all consistent, and it is common for a customer's name to appear in different forms between and within ledgers, and even on facing pages of the same folio. No attempt has been made to standardize forename or surname spellings within the index, and each variant spelling appears at the appropriate point in the index. There are no see or see also pointers and therefore users of the index should look under all possible variant spellings for each name.

Original use of capital letters has generally been retained, but in compiling the index entries the original wording of an account title is not always shown in full or in its original order.

Where accounts appear on a number of separate folios within one or more ledgers and these can be 'linked' (see 'Linked accounts' section below) all alternative forms of the name contained in the linked accounts have been brought together. The index entry for each form of the name records all of the variants on separate lines within the entry: alternative forms of forenames appear in the Forename(s) column and alternative surnames in the Alternative name(s) column. For example, a linked account with the variant surnames 'Friar', 'Frier' and 'Fryer' would appear at all three points in the index, the index entry for 'Frier' including 'Friar' and 'Fryer' in the Alternative name(s) column. The forename and surname variants are each listed alphabetically (and therefore independently of each other) within the entry.

Where accounts cannot be 'linked', variant spellings are not brought together and so, for instance, entries in separate folios for 'John Friar' and 'John Fryer' would appear in the index under each form of the name but without any corresponding cross-reference entries in the Alternative name(s) column. The only entries in the Alternative name(s) column for non-'linked' accounts are for variant names appearing on a single folio. For this reason when searching for a particular customer it is worth looking at the variant surnames listed in any other index entries for that surname, as they might help to identify potential variant surname spellings.

Very occasionally the modern form of a name is given in square brackets where this aids identification. Square brackets are also used to indicate any other information supplied during construction of the index (particularly relating to titled customers) which does not appear in the account title.

'Linked' accounts

Accounts appearing on multiple folios (within one or more ledgers) are linked together where it is reasonably certain that they relate to the same customer. In most cases a definite linkage has been established through balance carry forward and brought forward references from one folio to another. There are also many cases where accounts appearing under very similar forms of a customer name do not have outstanding balances to carry forward or where the carry forward link between ledgers is broken by the two non-extant ledgers within the series. These accounts are treated as being linked together only where the combination of forename and surname, or other information in the account title, makes it highly likely that they relate to the same customer.

Index order

Index entries appear in strictly alphabetical order of the main name, ignoring spaces and punctuation marks within names. Prefixed names (e.g. De Costa) appear under their prefix.

Where alternative forenames or surnames are given within an index entry these also appear in strictly alphabetical order. Where entries for two variant surname spellings relating to a single account or a 'linked' account would appear as consecutive entries in the index, the two variants appear on consecutive lines in the Surname column within the same index entry.

Where an account appears in the ledgers under two or more entirely different variant forenames the names are given separate index entries unless the two names would appear as consecutive entries in the index, in which case they appear on consecutive lines within the same index entry.

Joint and additional accounts

There are a number of accounts in the names of multiple persons. The index does not record whether an account holder's name relates to a sole or joint account – all names relating to joint accounts appear individually in the index. Similarly the index does not record the existence of multiple accounts under the same name.

Titles, epithets and additional information

Account holders who were members of the peerage are indexed under both their title name and (where known) their surname and forename, each entry containing a cross reference to the other form of name in the Alternative name(s) column. Peerage title names (e.g. 'Buckingham') appear in the Surname column and the title itself (e.g. 'Duke of') in the Forename(s) column, with the surname and forename (in that order, e.g. 'Villiers George') in the Alternative name(s) column. The corresponding index entry under the family name is constructed in the normal way ('Villiers' in the Surname column, 'George' in the Forename(s) column) and also contains the title name and title (in that order, e.g. 'Buckingham Duke of') in the Alternative name(s) column.

Epithets, occupations and places of residence of account holders are not included in the index, with the exception of those relating central and local government offices (including 'Alderman' and 'Mayor'), legal offices, military and naval ranks, ecclesiastical offices, knightage and baronetage titles ('Sir', 'Dame' and 'Lady'), 'Right Honourable', 'Honourable' and 'Dr'. These all appear in the index entries after the forename(s), and are contained in round brackets to aid readability. Where an account title does not include a forename, the personal title or epithet (even if not in the list above, e.g. 'Mr', 'Mistress', 'Esq') is given in round brackets in the Forename(s) column. The spelling of epithets and titles has been standardized.

Accounts containing no transactions

Occasionally an account heading has no transactions recorded below it. In these cases (no entries) appears in round brackets on a separate line in the Alternative name(s) column.
